ON THE COVER

New dean Rachel F. Moran at UCLA School of Law

DEAN RACHEL F. MORAN

In The University: An Owner's Manual, Henry Rosovsky remarked that his post as dean of Harvard's Faculty of Arts and Sciences was "frequently described somewhat arrogantly in Cambridge, Massachusetts—alas, rarely elsewhere—as the 'best and most important academic job in America.'" Rosovsky's account is tongue in cheek, but I confess that I feel extremely fortunate to have one of the best jobs in legal education, the deanship at UCLA School of Law. Many warm notes of congratulation convince me that this view extends well beyond Los Angeles. A great institution, and the youngest among the top law schools in the nation, UCLA Law is indeed a very special place.

As I embark on the deanship, I reflect on what makes an institution like UCLA School of Law great. Donald Kennedy, former president of Stanford University, observed that when ink is spilled about higher education, the stories nearly all focus on academic freedom. The liberty to think independently is a critical component of UCLA Law's vibrant intellectual culture. And, what better evidence of this ideological diversity could there be than a recent United States Supreme Court case that cites two of our constitutional law scholars for opposing claims about the right to bear arms?

But, as Kennedy noted, academic freedom is just part of the story. Coupled with this freedom is the far less widely recognized concept of duty: the university's obligation to disseminate knowledge, to nurture students and to serve the community. From its inception, UCLA Law has been committed to a public mission of access, excellence, innovation and service. The law school has struck a judicious balance between freedom and duty, so that excellence and innovation never crowd out access and service.

This balance is found in every aspect of UCLA Law's activities. Not only are faculty members renowned in their fields, but they seek to reform the law and to reach the public through op-eds, blogs and high-profile media appearances. Professors work hard to prepare the next generation of lawyers for fulfilling careers, as a record of award-winning teaching makes clear. For example, through work on behalf of the law school's clinics and programs, UCLA Law students have traveled the globe, effecting change while honing both their practical skills and critical thinking. The best proof of the law school's success comes when our graduates go on to illustrious careers. UCLA Law's alumni achieve distinction in every sector of practice, give back to the community and remain deeply engaged in the life of the school.

These are the ingredients that have enabled UCLA Law to become a leader in legal education. Time and again, the law school has shown the courage and vision to create unique initiatives that address pressing needs. Ten years ago, a group of faculty members launched the Critical Race Studies Program to provide new perspectives on issues of racial justice. The only program of its kind in the nation, it has generated groundbreaking scholarship and fresh curricular approaches. This year's anniversary celebration began with a symposium that attracted nearly 500 participants from around the world. Fittingly, the discussion focused on intersectionality, a concept first introduced by Professor Kimberlé Crenshaw a little more on to sustain UCLA Law's preeminence. We must employ creative strategies that expand our revenue and make the most of available resources. Many alumni and friends already have responded to this challenge, enabling the law school to raise 77% of the funds needed to meet our capital campaign goal.

But much remains to be done. American higher education has been shaped by fierce competition that in turn has produced some of the world's finest universities, UCLA among them. To maintain a comparative advantage, we must recruit and retain a top-notch faculty and student body. Upholding our historic promise of access to all who are qualified, whatever their financial resources, is paramount. And, we must than two decades ago. Her pioneering efforts revealed that anti-discrimination law fails to account for the complexity of human identity in ways that still leave some individuals, often the most vulnerable, without protection.

In the coming year, we will observe another milestone—the tenth anniversary of the Williams Institute on Sexual Orientation Law and Public Policy. The institute was founded in 2001 through a generous donation by Chuck Williams; his gift was the largest ever made to an academic institution in support of a program targeting the concerns of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered people. Since its creation, the Williams Institute has nurtured the next generation of scholars and advocates, and it has provided high-quality research to inform law and policy debates. Most recently, the institute has been the premier source of cutting-edge analysis regarding the legalization of same-sex marriage; this work featured centrally in the first federal court decision ever to strike down a same-sex marriage ban as unconstitutional.

In celebrating the law school's successes, we must not lose sight of the challenges that lie ahead. The uncertainty of California's budget and the steady decline in state support are ongoing concerns. The state can no longer be counted on to sustain UCLA Law's preeminence. We must employ creative strategies that expand our revenue and make the most of available resources. Many alumni and friends already have responded to this challenge, enabling the law school to raise 77% of the funds needed to meet our capital campaign goal.

I am confident that UCLA Law will stay true to its ambitions. The law school always has risen to the challenges that came its way, and it has benefited from outstanding deans, to whom I can turn for support and advice. I must extend a particular note of thanks to Stephen Yeazell, who served ably and cheerfully during the recent transition. In truth, everywhere I turn, I meet with generosity and goodwill. So, let me close by saying that what makes being dean at UCLA Law one of the best jobs around is the people. I realize how many of you feel a deep affection for this institution—and that is the best welcome I could have.

Warmly,

RACHEL F. MORAN

Professor Eagly has a background that includes both civil and criminal litigation, with three years as a litigation associate at Arnold & Porter and four years as a Federal Public Defender in Los Angeles. She has also served as a Soros Criminal Justice Fellow at the Coalition for Humane Immigrant Rights of Los Angeles (CHIRLA). Immediately after law school, she was a Skadden Fellow at the Legal Assistance Foundation of Chicago and clerked for the Honorable David H. Coar on the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois.

Professor Eagly's current research focuses on the intersection between immigration and criminal justice. She recently completed an article on the prosecution of immigration crime, which will be published in the Northwestern University Law Review this fall. Her scholarship has also appeared in the UCLA Law Review and the Clinical Law Review.

Acting Professor of Law

Allison Hoffman's work focuses on health care law and policy. This year she will teach Health Care Law and Policy and a seminar on Health Insurance and Reform.

Professor Hoffman received her A.B. summa cum laude from Dartmouth College and a law degree from the Yale Law School, where she was submissions editor for the Yale Journal of Health Policy, Law, and Ethics. She has spent a number of years working in the health care industry.

Professor Hoffman practiced health care law at Ropes & Gray, LLP, where she counseled academic medical centers, insurers, pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies and private equity firms on a wide range of health care regulatory matters. She has also provided strategic advice to health care companies and to nonprofit organizations and foundations as a management consultant at The Boston Consulting Group and The Bridgespan Group. Immediately prior to joining the faculty at UCLA Law, she was a fellow at Harvard's Petrie-Flom Center for Health Law Policy, Biotechnology and Bioethics.

Professor Hoffman's research and teaching explore the role of regulation and the welfare state in promoting health and well being. She examines, in particular, how regulation can shape the way people organize and conceptualize risk and responsibility, drawing on political science, sociology, psychology and economics literature. Her most recent article, entitled "Oil and Water: Mixing Individual Mandates, Fragmented Markets, and Health Reform," was published this spring in the American Journal of Law and Medicine. It evaluates the effectiveness of an individual mandate as part of national health care reform, incorporating evidence from the use of an individual mandate in 2006 health reform in Massachusetts. Her current project examines how the health reform bill simultaneously embraces several incompatible conceptions of the goal of health insurance and considers ensuing problems that might arise in its implementation.

SUNG HUI KIM

SUNG HUI KIM

Acting Professor of Law

Sung Hui Kim joins the UCLA Law faculty after having served as visiting professor of law at UCLA Law for the 2009-2010 academic year. Prior to joining UCLA, she taught at Southwestern Law School. Prior to teaching, she worked in private practice for many years, including service as the general counsel of a global corporation. She brings this knowledge of the modern business world to her courses on Business Associations, Securities Regulation and Professional Responsibility.

Professor Kim earned her bachelor's (summa cum laude) and master's degrees from Emory University. A condensed version of her master's thesis was published in The Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society. This article settled the identity of the author of Federalist No. 58 and remains the definitive history of supermajority provisions in the U.S. Constitution. After her graduation from Emory University, she spent a year in Seoul, South Korea as a Henry Luce Foundation Scholar. She then attended Harvard Law School where she graduated cum laude, and spent the following year in Germany on a fellowship supported by the German Robert Bosch Foundation, where she worked in the German Foreign Office and Berlin Cabinet of Ministers.

Professor Kim returned to the U.S. to begin her law practice in Washington, D.C. as a transactional lawyer focusing on mergers and acquisitions, private placements and public offerings for middle market corporations. In 1995, she relocated her practice to Los Angeles, California, where she began providing legal advice to the North American subsidiary of Austrian-based Red Bull, whose energy drink was then being introduced in the U.S. Red Bull North America is currently the seventh largest beverage company in the U.S. In 1999, she joined the company as its general counsel. As Red Bull's popularity surged and the company began marketing other beverages, including the Carpe Diem line of beverages and LunAqua, she supervised the company's U.S. legal matters in the areas of marketing and advertising, FDA, distribution, operations, licensing, antitrust, intellectual property, immigration and employment.

In her current legal scholarship, Professor Kim focuses on ethical issues facing transactional lawyers working in-house and in law firms and explores how these lawyers can be leveraged not only to improve the efficiency of the capital markets but also to improve the state of corporate governance. Her scholarship has appeared in the Fordham Law Review, the Georgetown Journal of Legal Ethics, SMU Law Review, with forthcoming pieces in the Florida Law Review and the University of Chicago Press.

Rev.* 1023 (2010), Professor Schwartz focuses on the information failures that often prevent informed decisionmaking. Her next project examines the ways that litigation information is used by law enforcement agencies—in the rare instances when it is used—to reduce the likelihood of future harms. Professor Schwartz has begun studying organizational decisionmaking practices in other contexts as well.

The Roots of Leadership

An American Journey to the Top

It's not difficult for incoming UCLA School of Law Dean Rachel Moran to find the thread that runs through her extraordinary legal career. As she sees it, it all comes down to roots. "I think each one of us is searching for meaning, and our experiences necessarily shape what that search looks like," she says. Dean Moran is quick to point out that her own background has played a pivotal role in her search, and in her professional development. "I had experiences early in my life that influenced the things I was interested in doing later on," she notes. The result: an "improbable path" that has taken her on a remarkable journey to the pinnacle of academic success.

Dean Moran spent her early years in Kansas and Missouri before heading west with her family. Growing up in Yuma, Arizona and Calexico, California, she had her first inkling that the law would factor prominently in her life. The daughter of an Irish father and Mexican mother, she understood from a young age the transformational power of American jurisprudence. At the time of her parents' marriage, Moran says, such unions "bordered on miscegenation." And for years afterward, her mother encountered instances of marginalization and exclusion, despite the fact that she was U.S.-born. "Loving v. Virginia had not yet been decided," observes Moran, "and there was no Civil Rights Act of 1964." Those advances slowly began to level the playing field—and that, she says, "was a revelation about the difference law makes."

That difference was tangible in other ways, too. In Calexico, Moran and her family lived close to the Mexico border, and some of her peers were extremely poor. "Every morning, you could hear kids' stomachs growling. After they brought in milk [as part of a federal child nutrition program], it would stop. Even then I could sense that hungry children aren't learning in the same way—and I could see how the law offered at least a partial remedy."

"I would say we scoured the earth in an extensive nationwide, and even global, search—and that, from the first interview, Rachel Moran knocked our socks off."

In Yuma, Dean Moran developed a newfound appreciation for the critical impact of public schools. "The schools in Yuma were strong," she says, "and I was able to get a good grounding in what I needed to compete in college." Her experience affirmed her belief in the importance of robust public institutions capable of providing students with the tools they need to thrive. Quality public schools, she says, teach kids that, "your mind can take you anywhere, even if you're in a small town."

In Dean Moran's case, "anywhere" was to the top. In high school, she participated in a summer program in mathematics run by the National Science Foundation and came to the attention of Dr. Edward Deaton, the program's director. "He urged me to look beyond the borders of my own state" for college, something she had never considered. With her parents' support, she applied—and got into—Stanford University, a place that dazzled her right from the start. "I loved the sheer volume of ideas," she says of her time in Palo Alto. "It was such an intellectual awakening for me, and gave me the capacity to envision so many different ways of living my life, well beyond what I had ever been able to imagine." She immediately threw herself into her studies, serving as a research assistant for faculty members, writing a senior honors thesis and finding time on the side to write for The Stanford Daily. During her undergraduate years, she developed what would prove to be a lifelong interest in bilingualism and the law; through an honors tutorial program (an invitation-only opportunity made available to a small number of entering freshmen), she began working with political science professor Jonathan Casper on issues related to non-English speakers in the criminal justice system.

Reflecting back on the experience, Dean Moran is both grateful and contemplative. "Why did I end up at Stanford when there were other kids I grew up with who were bright but disappeared into the system?" she wonders. She cites what she calls an "archipelago of opportunity"—that, "at every critical moment, there was a little island in the stream that I could grab onto before moving to the next one." More often than not, those "islands" were people like Dr. Deaton, whose advocacy on her behalf both highlighted the power of mentoring to have an impact on young people's lives and reinforced her commitment to advancing the country's promise of equal opportunity. "I don't think my own story would have been possible if people hadn't been willing to put themselves on the line to have the nation live up to its constitutional ideals," she says.

In pursuit of those ideals, Dean Moran set her sights on law school, enrolling at Yale and making her first trip east. The only person of Mexican descent in her class, she joined a student group called LANA (Latinos, Asians and Native Americans), an organization co-chaired by a young Sonia Sotomayor, who was a 3L when Moran arrived in New Haven. Just as she did as an undergraduate, Dean Moran easily distinguished herself as someone to watch, serving as a teaching assistant to the associate dean, placing second in the Harlan Fiske Stone Moot Court Prize Competition and earning a coveted spot on The Yale Law Journal. Her law review note, which dealt with bilingual education and whether or not language should be the basis for heightened scrutiny under the Constitution, "turned out to be a kind of prelude to the work I did when I became a professor."

"She possesses this amazing combination of both laser focus on detail and also a very broad-minded view of the big picture and direction of the law school as a whole."

Dean Moran's outstanding track record at Yale enabled her to secure a clerkship with Wilfred Feinberg, chief judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 2nd Circuit. It was, she says, another in a long line of "broadening experiences," allowing her to see everything from big business cases to pivotal criminal justice issues to intellectual property questions. It also put her squarely in the center of New York City, with its magnetic appeal, frenetic pace and other charms and challenges so distinct from small town living. "I came into New York at night in a rental car, and didn't know there were all these different boroughs," she says. After realizing she had lost her way, she pulled over and asked for directions. "I said, 'I'm looking for Manhattan,'" she recalls, laughing at her own naiveté.

Faced with a decision about next steps for her career, Dean Moran turned to her first love—learning—entering the legal teaching market and, in short order, fielding an offer from UC Berkeley's Boalt Hall. She accepted the professorship without hesitation but negotiated an upfront, two-year leave to get some hands-on experience, temporarily joining powerhouse firm Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe and working in both tax and litigation. "This anchored me in the world of practice in ways I wouldn't otherwise have been," she observes—and, as crucially, it connected her to what many of her students would be experiencing after graduation. The Heller years also cemented her professional identity, confirming that a life in the academy was just the right fit. “Practice seasoned me,” she says, “but teaching is a wonderful vocation.”

At Berkeley, her unflagging energy and consummate skill showed, netting her a prestigious distinguished teaching award. And, as she dedicated herself to her students, she simultaneously blazed a trail to academic stardom, publishing and lecturing extensively on education law and policy, family law and civil rights and anti-discrimination law. Her reputation as a world-class scholar and unequaled policy strategist put her in high demand, and she accepted visiting professorships at many of the country’s finest law schools, including Stanford, New York University, the University of Texas, Fordham University, the University of Miami and UCLA, as well as a position as a founding faculty member at the new UC Irvine School of Law. She also gained recognition on the national scene, serving as president of the Association of American Law Schools in 2009. Martín Sánchez-Jankowski, a professor of sociology and a colleague at Berkeley’s Institute for the Study of Social Change, which Moran directed from 2003 to 2008, describes her like this: “Rachel is exceptional—exceedingly smart and an incredibly meticulous scholar. You don’t usually find someone who is so intellectually competent and also brings incredible organizational skills, but she does. And she’s a supporter of new ideas and the people who she believes will both foster and implement them.” The bottom line, says Sánchez-Jankowski, is that Dean Moran “has qualities that just make her a terrific person to head an educational institution.”

With reviews like that, it’s no wonder that UCLA Law’s Dean Search Committee selected her as the eighth dean—and only the second woman, after Susan Westerberg Prager—to lead one of the nation’s most prestigious institutions. From the outset, says Professor of Law and Vice Dean of Academic Affairs Kirk Stark, who served on the committee, there was little doubt that Moran was the right choice. “I would say we scoured the earth in an extensive nationwide, and even global, search—and that, from the first interview, Rachel Moran knocked our socks off.” Jim Barrall ’75, another committee member, agrees, and points out that Dean Moran’s resume is uniquely suited to her new role. Her extensive experience, he says, “has given her special insights into the challenges facing public law schools, especially in California, as well as into the great competitive advantages that UCLA Law enjoys over many of its much older, more well-established peer schools.” According to Professor Stark, she brought something else to the table, as well: “She possesses this amazing combination of both laser focus on detail and also a very broad-minded view of the big picture and direction of the law school as a whole,” he says. In his view, this ability to wear both hats—effective day-to-day administrator and visionary strategic planner—makes Dean Moran an indispensable asset in a highly competitive market. “She is someone who came in with a real sense of how to help the law school excel, and with a lot of great ideas for the future,” he says.

When Moran assumes the deanship this October, the future will be a front-and-center concern. And in an era of unprecedented, and unknown, challenges, she is confident UCLA Law will stay at the top of its game. “The law school has already done so many innovative things, including demonstrating meaningful leadership in clinical education, and helping students position themselves in the job market through specializations, skills training and externships,” she says. As she prepares to hit the ground running, Dean Moran is excited to continue this tradition of innovation—and her own history of stellar accomplishment makes it a sure bet she’ll deliver.

A Conversation with Dean Rachel F. Moran

UCLA Law's new dean shares her priorities for the law school and goals for the future

What made you interested in making the transition from professor to dean?

Throughout my career, I have done a great deal of institution-building, work that has been immensely satisfying and has left a lasting impact. As dean, I will have the chance to participate in shaping outstanding programs of research, teaching and service on an entirely different scale than was true before. UCLA School of Law already is a leading institution of legal education, but it has even more potential to influence the academy and the profession.

When you learned that you had been selected as dean of UCLA School of Law, what was your first reaction?

I was thrilled to learn of my selection. The process was intensely competitive, and the search committee reviewed a large number of applicants. To emerge from that process as the next dean is probably the closest a law professor can come to the experience of winning “American Idol.”

What do you see as some of the challenges of your new position?

The greatest challenge relates to the uncertainties of the state budget. The good news is that UCLA Law is in very fine financial shape, a bastion of institutional health and optimism in the University of California system. My job is to make sure that the school remains on track through creative strategies to expand revenue and careful stewardship of available resources.

What are your top priorities for your first year as dean of UCLA Law?

During the first year of my deanship, I want to reach out and introduce myself to the UCLA Law community of faculty, students, alumni and other friends, and staff. I want to use these conversations to deepen my understanding of people's hopes and concerns. The talks will be my way of saying that I welcome ideas and want to hear from everyone who cares deeply about the school's future. I also plan to use the year to deal with urgent business: making progress toward a successful conclusion of the capital campaign and taking steps to recruit and retain a top-notch faculty and students in the face of competitive pressures.

What are your longer-term goals for the law school?

I want to cement UCLA Law's place as a great public law school. From its inception, the school has stood for access, excellence, innovation and service. A steady decline in state support has jeopardized these commitments by seemingly pitting access and service against excellence and innovation. Many have assumed that increased reliance on private giving necessarily means the death of public values. But part of what makes UCLA Law so special—and so attractive to me as a new dean—is that this is a genuine community. There is a sense of shared purpose that can form the basis for a public-private partnership that remains true to the school's traditions even in changing circumstances. By building an endowment that supports a rigorous program of legal education, I believe that UCLA Law can keep its doors open to students from all walks of life based on their ability to contribute, regardless of their ability to pay.

Why did you decide to go to law school? Did you want to become a lawyer?

When I was an undergraduate, I was torn about whether to go to law school or graduate school in psychology. While I was trying to decide, two of my professors invited me to work on a study of women and the construction industry. The League of Women Voters had challenged the Department of Labor's hiring guidelines because they did not include women. The Department justified the omission on the ground that women were not interested in construction jobs. Our research showed that in the absence of guidelines, women were not interested, but with guidelines, women became very interested. Faced with evidence that the federal policy was little more than a self-fulfilling prophecy, the Department eventually instituted guidelines for women. Not too long thereafter, as my family was driving down the highway, I saw a woman in a hard hat working on a construction project. I realized how powerful law could be, and I wound up applying to law school instead of going to graduate school.

What accomplishments are you most proud of?

I am most proud of work that has had some enduring influence. My book Interracial Intimacy: The Regulation of Race and Romance was one of the earliest to look beyond civil rights in the public realm to consider how race and ethnicity affect our most intimate personal relationships. Since the book's publication, the field has grown tremendously. In addition, I am gratified by the recent successes of the Institute for the Study of Social Change at Berkeley. The institute had been created in the 1970s to address issues of diversity, but when Proposition 209 ended affirmative action at the University of California, the institute had to forge new strategies to keep its mission alive. As director, I worked with a number of talented and dedicated people to craft a vibrant new identity for the organization that still honored its historical commitments. Last but not least, I take considerable pride in former students who have gone on to distinguished careers. Each one emerged from law school with the character and capacity to make a difference, and I am grateful to have played a small part in helping them to become consummate professionals.

“...part of what makes UCLA Law so special—and so attractive to me as a new dean—is that this is a genuine community.”

Looking toward the future—five years from now—what would you most like to have accomplished as dean?

With respect to faculty, I want all of our professors to conclude that there is no better place to do their work than UCLA Law. In my experience, that happens when scholars not only feel that they are supported as individuals but also feel that they are part of a culture of collegial exchange. If I am successful, law faculty members will enjoy the tangible and intangible benefits that allow them to bring luster to the law school and to think of UCLA as their intellectual home.

With respect to students, I want every person we admit to develop a strong sense of professional identity. The Carnegie Report on “Educating Lawyers” recently concluded that American law schools do a fine job of teaching substantive law and critical thinking, that skills training has improved substantially, but that little is done to inculcate an understanding of the role of the lawyer in the larger society.

“I believe that UCLA Law can keep its doors open to students from all walks of life based on their ability to contribute, regardless of their ability to pay.”

Five years from now, if I am successful, the law school will have developed new ways to help students build their professional identities in a deliberate and reflective way. Some of these efforts will involve closer collaboration with alumni who can serve as mentors and role models for students who are navigating an increasingly complex array of course offerings and career options.

With respect to alumni and friends, I want all of them to know that they are vitally important and deeply appreciated members of the UCLA Law community. If I am successful, alumni and other benefactors will realize that they play a critical role in mentoring students, identifying emerging opportunities in the profession and supporting the law school financially. Donors will be confident that their money is being put to good use. Transparency and accountability will be constant watchwords of my deanship.

With respect to staff, I want all staff members to know that they are valued members of the UCLA Law team. If I am successful, each person who works at UCLA Law will understand that we are part of a collaborative enterprise and that staff efforts are key to making it a joy to come to the law school each day. Though the presence of a high-quality staff is not formally factored into law school rankings, the dedicated personnel at UCLA Law enable the law school to make the most of its resources. Not just in five years, but on a daily basis, I want to give credit where credit is due.

Are you excited about being in Los Angeles?

There are a handful of great global cities, and Los Angeles is one of them. I think it is probably the youngest metropolis in the group, so there is a sense of energy and possibility that is truly unique. That makes it a terrific location for a law school with a tradition of innovation. The arts and culture also are outstanding, and the diversity is energizing. And, then, of course, there is the weather, which must be synonymous with sunny optimism.

How do you feel about being the first Latina dean of a top twenty law school?

The journey to this moment in my life has been an improbable one. When I was walking down the hall of my elementary school one day, I overheard a teacher say: “Such a bright girl, too bad there’s no future for her.” I will never forget how devastating it felt to be written off before I had reached the age of eight. But America turned out to be a greater country than that teacher could have imagined. At the same time that she was making her grim prediction, people of courage were mobilizing to make our nation live up to its promise of equal opportunity. Thanks to their efforts, the love and support of my parents and the kindness of mentors who nurtured my potential, I have had the chance to flourish and grow throughout my life. Now, another barrier has fallen, and I think it is fitting that this happened at UCLA Law. Expanding access is an ethic that is rooted deep in the school’s history. UCLA has led the way, for instance, by being among the first top law schools to appoint a woman dean, Susan Westerberg Prager. I am honored to follow in that tradition of openness and inclusion, and I promise you the best that I have in me. I hope that this vote of confidence will open the door for even more talented people who have followed their own improbable journeys to live out their dreams.

UCLA SCHOOL OF LAW

Thanks Interim Dean Stephen C. Yeazell

The UCLA School of Law community gratefully acknowledges the leadership of Interim Dean Stephen C. Yeazell and thanks him for his service to the law school. Under his exceptional stewardship, UCLA Law has not only continued to thrive, but has also continued to grow and innovate in the tradition upon which the school was founded.

Among his impressive achievements, Interim Dean Yeazell has maintained the momentum of the Campaign for UCLA School of Law, bringing the capital campaign's total to nearly $80 million, and helping to secure the law school's financial future. Under his leadership, the law school has also secured significant resources for student loan forgiveness to support UCLA Law graduates who are pursuing public interest careers.

With Interim Dean Yeazell at the helm, UCLA Law received its highest number of applicants ever—more than 8,700 for fall 2010, only 16% of whom the law school admitted. At Convocation, Interim Dean Yeazell welcomed one of the most impressive entering classes in the history of the school.

Interim Dean Yeazell also strengthened and grew UCLA Law's already excellent faculty. His support and guidance helped to retain the law school's stellar scholars and teachers, whose records of achievement continue to be outstanding. Moreover, through Interim Dean Yeazell's direction, UCLA Law has attracted prominent visiting faculty members from prestigious peer institutions, including Yale Law School, Harvard Law School and Duke University School of Law, and recruited four junior faculty members to the law school.

During the past academic year, Interim Dean Yeazell further enhanced UCLA Law's commitment to grapple with pressing matters of public concern. With Interim Dean Yeazell's support, the law school inaugurated UCLA Law's Program on Understanding Law, Science and Evidence (PULSE) with a conference that brought together leading voices in the discipline of forensic science to examine the field's role in shaping litigation and social policy. The law school also hosted a landmark Critical Race Studies (CRS) Symposium, which focused on "intersectionality"—a concept introduced by our own Professor Kimberlé Crenshaw, which has generated bodies of literatures inside and outside of legal academia and has altered how judges adjudicate anti-discrimination claims. Nearly 500 participants from around the world attended this year's remarkable gathering.

As the search for the eighth dean of UCLA School of Law moved forward, Interim Dean Yeazell's wealth of experience was critical. Moreover, he played a key role in the recruitment of incoming Dean Rachel F. Moran, an academic star and award-winning teacher with tremendous administrative experience.

In his 35 years at UCLA School of Law, Steve Yeazell has shown an unwavering commitment to excellence. He has played key roles in service to both the law school and the university. Among his positions, he served as chair of the UCLA Academic Senate and as associate dean of UCLA Law under Dean Susan Westerberg Prager. UCLA has recognized him with the campus's highest awards both for his teaching—a Distinguished Teaching Award—and his research—the Faculty Research Lectureship. The list of Steve's accomplishments is long. He has had a profound impact on the law school.

The entire UCLA Law community—the faculty, administration, students, staff, alumni and friends—wish to express their deepest appreciation to Steve for his leadership and his excellence in this important role.

A $1 MILLION GIFT FROM STEWART '62 AND

LYNDA RESNICK and the Resnick Family Foundation will support UCLA School of Law graduates who are working in public interest jobs. The Stewart and Lynda Resnick Endowed Fund in Support of Public Interest Law, administered through the law school's Loan Repayment Assistance Program (LRAP), will provide loan forgiveness support for recent law school graduates who are working at nonprofit organizations or government agencies. The recipients will use the Resnick Awards to help repay law school student loans.

"Stewart and Lynda Resnick are dedicated philanthropists with a long history of giving to UCLA. This gift honors their commitment to giving back," Interim Dean Stephen C. Yeazell said. "By alleviating the debt burdens many students face and the implications on their ability to pursue public interest jobs, the gift will play a significant role in preventing students from compromising their career goals for financial reasons. We are very grateful for their generosity."

Stewart and Lynda Resnick are longtime, active supporters of UCLA and of the greater Los Angeles community. Through their philanthropy, they have generously supported the UCLA Medical Sciences; the Stewart and Lynda Resnick Neuropsychiatric Hospital at UCLA was named in their honor. Together, Stewart and Lynda lead Roll International, a privately held, U.S. multi-billion dollar corporation with diverse interests including agriculture, consumer packaged goods, floral services and more. The company's holdings include Teleflora, Fiji Water, POM Wonderful, Paramount Citrus, Paramount Farms and Suterra.

Stewart Resnick, who also received an undergraduate degree from UCLA in 1959, is a member of the executive board of the UCLA Medical Sciences and a member of the advisory board of the UCLA Anderson School of Management. He is a member of the board of trustees of Bard College; the board of trustees of the J. Paul Getty Trust; the Board of Conservation International; and a trustee of the California Institute of Technology. Lynda Resnick serves on the executive boards of the Aspen Institute, the UCLA Medical Sciences, the Prostate Cancer Foundation and the Milken Family Foundation. She is vice chairman of the Los Angeles County Museum of Art Board of Trustees and is also a trustee of the Philadelphia Museum of Art.

La Raza Law Students Association Honors Former Faculty Member and UCLA Law Alumni

Jose Huizar, Kim McLane Wardlaw and Cruz Reynoso

THE UCLA LA RAZA LAW STUDENTS ASSOCIATION honored the Honorable Cruz Reynoso, former California Supreme Court Justice—the first Chicano member of the California Supreme Court—and a former UCLA Law faculty member, as well as two UCLA Law alumni, the Honorable Kim McLane Wardlaw '79, United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, and the Honorable Jose Huizar '97, member of the Los Angeles City Council, at the annual La Raza Alumni Dinner. The event, which was held in February, featured special presentations by UCLA Chancellor Gene Block and the Honorable Carlos Moreno. The annual reception brings La Raza alumni together with students, who have the opportunity to learn about their experiences in various areas of the law.

Nelson Rising '67 Delivers Regents Lecture

Nelson Rising

NELSON RISING '67, director, president and chief executive officer of Maguire Properties, Inc. and a member of the UCLA School of Law Board of Advisors, visited the law school in October as the 2009 Regents Lecturer. While on campus he met with faculty, participated in a law school class and delivered an insightful public lecture, "California: Will the Golden Days Return?" To a packed audience, Rising addressed California's current state budget crisis and the future of the state of California. He talked about the problem with voting on initiatives and that the initiative process can only be changed by an initiative, as well as the problem with the state budgeting on an annual basis. Despite the current challenges, Rising said that the state of California is resilient and that he believes the golden days will return.

Father and Son Trial Lawyers Present Irving H. Green Memorial Lecture

David Glickman and Steven Glickman

DAVID GLICKMAN '57 AND STEVEN GLICKMAN '82, partners at Glickman & Glickman and the first father and son team to deliver the Irving H. Green Memorial Lecture, presented "What it Means to be a Trial Lawyer" in October. They described the day-to-day work of a trial lawyer and talked about the real difference trial lawyers can make. David, who has practiced continuously in the Los Angeles area for 52 years, likened preparing for a trial to organizing a large-scale production, where you take on the role of actor and wardrobe consultant in addition to that of the lawyer. "It's the ultimate chess game," added Steven, who is one of the youngest members ever admitted to the American Board of Trial Advocates (ABOTA).

Launch of Human Rights & International Criminal Law Online Forum

THE INAUGURAL ISSUE of the Human Rights & International Criminal Law Online Forum, created by students of the Sanela Diana Jenkins Human Rights Project in partnership with the Office of the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court, launched in September at www.uclalawforum.com. The forum allows members of the legal community, governments, academics and others to debate complex issues of international criminal law faced by the Office of the Prosecutor in the course of its work at the International Criminal Court (ICC). The first forum issue focuses on whether the prosecutor of the ICC has the authority to open an investigation into alleged crimes committed in the 2008-2009 Gaza conflict.

IN THE PAST YEAR, UCLA School of Law's three S.J.D. program graduates have advanced their careers. Mirit Eyal-Cohen has landed a tenure track position at the University of Pittsburgh, and Amir Boozari and Hilal Elver have had their dissertations accepted for publication as books by Palgrave Macmillan and Oxford University Press respectively.

An additional S.J.D. student, Yang Lui, joins the program this fall from China. He holds an LL.B. from Tsinghua University and an LL.M. degree from Harvard Law School, and he will be working with Professor Richard Steinberg.

Two UCLA Law Alumni Honored as “Rock Stars”

Jenny Chung and Alisa Daubenspeck

JENNY CHUNG '07 AND ALISA DAUBENSPECK '07 were recently named 2010 “Rock Stars” by the Western Center on Law and Poverty. Daubenspeck and Chung, both graduates of the UCLA School of Law’s David J. Epstein Program in Public Interest Law and Policy (EPILP), were recognized for their work in tandem with the Western Center to secure and enforce the rights of disadvantaged people. They were honored during the Western Center’s 7th Annual Fair Shake benefit in June.

“Jenny and Alisa’s achievements are emblematic of the impact our alumni are having in our communities,” said Catherine Mayorkas, director of EPILP and of Public Interest Programs. “It is gratifying to see them honored for their important efforts to effect change and combat injustice.”

Daubenspeck, a staff attorney at the Central American Resource Center, practices immigration law, specifically humanitarian relief for victims of domestic violence and other violent crimes. The majority of her clients are undocumented single mothers. “I hear horrible stories, but at the end of the day, I am inspired by most of my clients’ dedication to doing everything humanly possible to provide for their kids,” she said. “My work supports them in theirs, and so it is extremely gratifying.”

“It’s exciting and humbling to be honored,” said Chung, a staff attorney with the Insight Center for Community Economic Development, which leads a state-wide policy coalition advocating for programs that build economic security for thousands of Californians. “This honor recognizes the achievements of the broader public interest legal community that I am so lucky to be a part of,” Chung, who also co-manages the Insight Center’s “Building Economic Security for All” project, said.

Daubenspeck and Chung both credit UCLA Law, and EPILP, for helping pave the way for their current success. “UCLA Law and the David J. Epstein Program in Public Interest Law and Policy opened my eyes to the myriad ways I could apply my legal education, including through transactional law and public policy,” Chung said. “Every aspect of the David J. Epstein Program in Public Interest Law and Policy has influenced my career in some form.”

“The public interest program was amazing,” added Daubenspeck. “It’s very nice on the one hand to see my work recognized, but it also feels a little strange because so many of my fellow EPILPers are doing amazing work and I don’t think that what I’m doing is any more noteworthy,” she said.

UCLA School of Law has a long history with the Western Center. Three EPILP alumni, Katie Murphy ’00, a former Skadden Fellow, Andrea Luquetta ’06 and Abigail Coursolle ’09, current Equal Justice Works Fellow, serve as staff attorneys at the organization. Two current UCLA Law students, Ella Hushagen ’12, a member of EPILP, and Jaliesa Bolds ’12, spent the past summer interning at the Western Center.

Hugh & Hazel Darling Foundation Leads Way to Upgrade Classroom Technology

A LEADING GIFT from the Hugh & Hazel Darling Foundation of $250,000 will be used to upgrade and modernize the law school’s classroom technology. UCLA School of Law’s forward-thinking faculty has always had an interest in the impact of educational technology and has embraced its adoption and integration in the classroom. By expanding the law school’s technical capabilities, this gift will greatly enhance the effectiveness of the faculty’s teaching and will help the law school stay at the forefront of legal education.

The Hugh & Hazel Darling Foundation has a long history of support for the law school. The foundation’s generosity and leadership were instrumental in the creation of the law school’s Hugh & Hazel Darling Law Library, which opened in 1998.

Professor Ronald Dworkin Named Distinguished Scholar in Residence

Ronald Dworkin

RONALD DWORKIN, professor of philosophy and Frank Henry Sommer professor of law at New York University, will visit UCLA School of Law each year as a Distinguished Scholar in Residence with the UCLA Law and Philosophy Program. He is one of the world’s preeminent scholars of jurisprudence and political philosophy and is considered by many to be the most influential figure in contemporary Anglo-American legal theory.

In his first visit as distinguished scholar in residence, in March, Professor Dworkin gave a talk to law faculty, spoke at a Philosophy Department colloquium, participated in a Legal Theory Workshop, met with students and discussed his forthcoming book, Justice for Hedgehogs.

A. Barry Cappello Courtroom Inaugurated with a Special Sitting of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in October with a special sitting of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit and a reception in honor of A. Barry Cappello '65 and his wife Lori for their $1.25 million gift to endow UCLA Law's Trial Practice Program. Chief Judge Alex Kozinski '75, Senior Circuit Judge Dorothy W. Nelson '53 and Circuit Judge Kim McLane Wardlaw '79 heard appeals in the new courtroom before joining Barry Cappello and his family for the courtroom dedication ceremony and reception. Numerous faculty and students also attended the celebration.

UCLA SCHOOL OF LAW INAUGURATED THE A. BARRY CAPPELLO COURTROOM

Barry Cappello, who aspired to be a trial lawyer from the age of 12, is recognized as one of the nation's leading trial lawyers and an authority on complex commercial litigation. He is the managing partner of the Santa Barbara, California law firm

Lori and Barry Cappello and their sons

Kim McLane Wardlaw, Alex Kozinski and Dorothy Nelson

Cappello & Noël, LLP. During his career, which spans more than four decades, he has obtained jury verdicts in the hundreds of millions of dollars for individuals and small businesses harmed by some of the world's largest corporations. Before entering private practice, he served a seven-year-tenure as city attorney of Santa Barbara, during which he was the chief litigator against Union Oil, Mobil, Gulf and Texaco for the massive 1969 Santa Barbara Channel oil spill.

The beautiful state-of-the-art courtroom was made possible through the philanthropic leadership of Barry Cappello and his family. It will serve as UCLA Law's primary courtroom where students will compete in mock trials, moot courts and simulated trials, gaining experience arguing in a realistic courtroom environment.

Another Successful PILF Auction

THE 17TH ANNUAL PUBLIC INTEREST LAW FUND (PILF) AUCTION, held in March, was another great success thanks to the donors, sponsors, volunteers and bidders. A highlight of the lively evening was the live auction, with Professor Thomas Holm and Jeff Cohen '05 auctioning off vacations, rounds of golf and outings with UCLA Law faculty members, among other prizes.

Each year PILF, a student-run organization, raises funds to help provide summer grants to first- and second-year students who intend to pursue unpaid public service work during the summer. Led this past year by Auction Co-Chairs Edward Ong '11 and Cynthia Pearson '10, and with the support of the Office of Public Interest Programs, the efforts of student board members and volunteers, and the generosity of faculty, alumni and members of the community, the event continues to be one of the year's highlights. More than 800 people attended this year's auction, and the money raised helped the school fund the more than 240 students who worked in nonprofit organizations and government agencies throughout the country and abroad this past summer.

Conference Addresses Developments in Chinese Law

THE CHINA LAW ASSOCIATION at UCLA School of Law sponsored a conference in March on leading developments in Chinese law and their implications for U.S.-China relations. Speakers presented on civil society, environmental law, commercial arbitration and Chinese legal reform generally. Barbara Finamore, senior attorney and China program director at the Natural Resources Defense Council, gave the keynote address.

The colloquium featured scholars in law and economics, who presented their forthcoming work. A range of topics was covered, including "Lasting Legislation"—particularly timely in light of the looming expiration of many Bush-era tax cuts—and an examination of a new exempt category for churches. This year's speakers included:

Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals Win

Amy Pomerantz Nickerson

UCLA SCHOOL OF LAW STUDENT Amy Pomerantz Nickerson '10, a participant in the law school's Ninth Circuit Appellate Advocacy Clinic, won a Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals immigration case in April. Working with an attorney at law firm O'Melveny & Myers, Nickerson litigated Garnica-Ramirez v. Holder, a criminal immigration proceeding on behalf of a non-citizen. The court's decision will allow their client to remain in the United States with his family, instead of being deported to Mexico, where he has not lived for 35 years.

"Litigating this case was the most exciting and rewarding experience of my law school career. It was an incredible opportunity to develop my oral and written advocacy skills, and was very gratifying to see our hard work pay off in the end," Nickerson said. "Not only did the clinic provide invaluable real-world experience, it was the first time I was able to actually utilize my legal skills to help change someone's life for the better."

Launched in fall 2008 as a joint effort between the law school and O'Melveny & Myers, the clinic represents pro bono clients at the federal appellate level. The lawyers and students collaborate on challenging issues of importance including immigration, criminal procedure and criminal law.

Inaugural PULSE Symposium Analyzes Future of Forensic Science

UCLA SCHOOL OF LAW'S new Program on Understanding Law, Science and Evidence (PULSE) brought together leading participants in the forensic science debate to examine the future of forensic science at "Forensic Science: A Blueprint for the Future." During the one-day symposium, held in February, law enforcement officials, forensic practitioners, attorneys, law professors, psychologists and judges not only reflected on the aftermath of a National Academy of Sciences (NAS) report, released one year earlier, assessing the strengths and limitations of forensic science, but also considered ways to create a blueprint for the future.

Professors Jennifer Mnookin and Jerry Kang, who co-founded PULSE, organized the inaugural conference.

Professor Mnookin moderated a conference panel on framing the issues surrounding the forensic science debate, while Professor Kang served as the moderator of a panel examining the NAS report.

PULSE, founded in 2009, engages in interdisciplinary research, discussion and programming to explore the many connections between law and science, technology and evidence.

Prisoner Re-entry Legal Clinic Impacts Local Community and Careers of UCLA Law Alumni

UCLA LAW'S PRISONER RE-ENTRY LEGAL CLINIC, which began as a pilot program, has outlived its two-year funding and continues to not only impact the community, but also the students and alumni who are part of it.

Piloted in the fall of 2007, the clinic was created through a partnership between the Critical Race Studies Program (CRS) and A New Way of Life Re-entry Project, a nonprofit organization that addresses employment discrimination faced by people with past criminal records. With the goal of reducing the barriers to re-entry and assisting former prisoners in reclaiming their lives, the student-run legal clinic trains law students to expunge misdemeanor and felony convictions and assist with employment discrimination claims.

One out of five people in Los Angeles have a criminal record, according to Joshua Kim '08, a staff attorney at A New Way of Life who helped create the clinic at UCLA Law. "We get people jobs," he said.

It was Kim who, after interning at A New Way of Life, helped to get the clinic off the ground. He recruited fellow student Jesse Hsieh '08, who currently works in the Clean Slate Practice at the East Bay Community Law Center, focusing almost exclusively on post-conviction remedies for people with criminal records. While the clinic was being set up, Hsieh was volunteering at the Workers' Rights Clinic at Neighborhood Legal Services of Los Angeles (NLS-LA), where he assisted many clients seeking expungements and helped NLS-LA revise their expungement manual.

"During one of the clinics, Joshua came by to observe and recognized me. He pointed at me and said, 'You are training our law students,'" said Hsieh, who did end up training groups of students and served as a resource for the students volunteers. "I believe that the clinic experience reinforced my interest in criminal law in a way that nothing had before," Hsieh said. "I was still very much up in the air about my work until I started working with the clinic. Since then, I have decided that my career will involve criminal law practice in some way."

"The most important aspect of this clinic is the hands-on experience. It gives students the opportunity to use what they are learning in the classroom and make it relevant to people's lives."

Claudia Peña '08

Claudia Peña, Joshua Kim and Jesse Hsieh

In addition to impacting career plans, the clinic provides students with an opportunity for hands-on social change work. "The most important aspect of this clinic is the hands-on experience. It gives students the opportunity to use what they are learning in the classroom and make it relevant to people's lives," said Claudia Peña '08, statewide coordinator for the California Coalition for Civil Rights who worked as the clinic student coordinator and also helped establish the re-entry clinic. "It was important to me to be able to do something concrete for the local community as a student and to be able to put my CRS knowledge to use," she said. "I wanted to be part of a project that would outlive me."

Keiara Auzenne '11, one of the current clinic co-chairs, agrees. Through her work with the clinic, she has developed valuable client interaction skills and has learned that the law is not black and white. "People are human. They make mistakes. They make bad choices. But almost everyone deserves a second chance," she said. "The clinic helps them participate in society."

The clinic is now the largest ongoing, monthly re-entry clinic in Southern California, filing approximately 40 expungement petitions a month and assisting approximately 30 clients a month. However, Joshua Kim cautions that there is much more work to be done. "It has the potential to be a community changing institution," he said, citing the larger opportunity for community organizing and assisting clients in their efforts to transform the laws and policies that impact them.

"Though successfully dismissing criminal convictions is a feat in and of itself, the real success comes in changing policy around re-entry issues," said Claudia Peña. "So, even though helping one person at a time change his/her life is rewarding, changing policy so that it may affect many more people's lives is that much more rewarding."

The clinic is now offered on an ongoing basis and is one of 12 clinics under the El Centro Legal umbrella, a student organization at UCLA School of Law that coordinates volunteer clinics and is supported by the Office of Public Interest Programs.

ALUMNI SPOTLIGHT: George C. Halversen '62

ON HIS FIRST DAY AT UCLA SCHOOL OF LAW, GEORGE C. HALVERSEN '62 expected an orientation, an introduction to the law school. Instead, Professor Richard Maxwell called on him to discuss a case, and he was surprised to learn that incoming students were expected to check a bulletin board in advance of class to get their upcoming assignments. "I didn't even know where the bulletin board was on that first day," laughed Halversen, who went on to establish his own law firm in Glendale, where he practiced for 37 years before retiring in 2000.

When Halversen, a graduate of Northwestern University, finished his military duty in the U.S. Air Force, he was admitted to law school at UCLA, the University of Southern California, UC Berkeley and Stanford University. One reason he chose UCLA was the cost: $68 per semester. "It was one of the best investments I ever made," he said. "Being able to attend UCLA School of Law was truly a blessing. It was tough but enlightening and definitely enriched my life."

In appreciation, Halversen and his wife of 56 years, Grace, have given generously to UCLA Law and the UCLA campus during the past 35 years. Their donations to UCLA School of Law have included gift annuities and an irrevocable testamentary pledge of $1 million. "UCLA Law gave me a great opportunity and Grace and I want to give something back to the school," he said.

Halversen has also contributed to UCLA Law by serving in recent years as a moot court judge. "I was so impressed by the high caliber of our students," he said. "They are intelligent, well prepared and always did an excellent job." He always tells students that law is a great background for whatever they choose to do.

The Halversens feel that gift annuities are mutually beneficial. "They help the school, provide a fair return on our investment and are an excellent means of showing our appreciation," he said.

Legacy or "planned" gifts help to ensure UCLA School of Law's ability to provide world-class legal education for generations to come. For more information on making a planned gift, please contact Donna Colin, director of major gifts and stewardship, at (310) 825-3025 or colin@law.ucla.edu.

Melville B. Nimmer Memorial Lecture on "Facts and the First Amendment"

FREDERICK SCHAUER, the David and Mary Harrison distinguished professor of law at the University of Virginia School of Law, delivered the 2009 Melville B. Nimmer Memorial Lecture in October on "Facts and the First Amendment." Describing some of the factual falsities in public debate, such as the intentional creation of AIDS or the non-existence of the Holocaust, Schauer said that the First Amendment fails to address questions of factuality and falsity.

Business Law and Policy Program Roundtable Explores "Short-Termism"

IN APRIL, UCLA LAW'S Business Law and Policy Program co-sponsored, with the UCLA Anderson School of Management and the Aspen Institute, a roundtable discussion on "short-termism," an approach to business that focuses on short-term results rather than long-term goals. Participants at "Short-Termism: Leverage Points for Encouraging a Longer-Term Focus in Capital Markets," included legal scholars, economists and business leaders. They discussed the origins of short-termism and how to encourage a greater focus on the long-term, explored how financial intermediaries, such as managers of mutual funds and hedge funds, contribute to a short-term focus, and suggested solutions to encourage healthy business and investing behaviors.

Law Firm Challenge Results Break All Past Records

THE UCLA LAW FIRM CHALLENGE continues to break records. For the year ended June 30, 2010, the 8th year of the Law Firm Challenge, 89 firms participated to support the school through teamwork and friendly competition. Of the more than 1,350 alumni participating, 78% made a gift to the school. A record 43 firms reached the 100% mark.

Founding Chair James D. C. Barrall '75 has worked tirelessly since 2002 to develop this initiative to build relationships between UCLA School of Law and the practicing legal world. The good will, cooperation and palpable benefits to the law firms and to UCLA Law have set the standard for law firm outreach programs at law schools nationwide.

The support of the Law Firm Challenge firms and their representatives is vital to the future of UCLA Law—especially in these hard economic times. This year the challenge was expanded by the formation of the Class Reunion Challenge, in which the 2010 reunion classes challenged themselves to support the school and build its alumni participation rate.

To learn more about the Law Firm Challenge please visit www.law.ucla.edu/LFC. To enroll your organization in the challenge—and no firm is too small—please contact Rebecca Melville at (310) 206-1170 or via e-mail at melville@law.ucla.edu.

Kenneth Feinberg

KENNETH R. FEINBERG, the Treasury Department's special master for executive compensation and currently the administrator of the Gulf Oil Spill Compensation Fund, discussed his role on executive compensation during a UCLA School of Law Business Law and Policy Program presentation in October. Feinberg, who previously served as special master of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund, was appointed to review and approve the compensation of senior executives and other highly paid employees at firms receiving federal bailout money. Speaking at UCLA just weeks before his executive compensation recommendations were due, he gave a summary of where he was in the process and described his tasks.

UCLA Law Alumnus Receives Gates Cambridge Scholarship

Jordan Blair Woods

JORDAN BLAIR WOODS '09 was recently awarded a Gates Cambridge Scholarship to pursue a Ph.D. in Criminology at the University of Cambridge. Woods' research will explore how different police stations across England, Northern Ireland and Scotland handle hate crimes, with a particular emphasis on the policing of hate crimes against lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people.

"My experience at UCLA Law truly shaped my passion and dedication to criminal justice issues,"

Woods said. "I am especially grateful for the support and encouragement that I received from my mentors at UCLA Law. My law professors were so supportive and helpful during every step of the scholarship process. Without them, I would have never been able to achieve this."

Woods, who is currently pursuing a Master's degree in Criminological Research at the University of Cambridge, intends to use his research to devise implementable recommendations for policing hate crime in North America and the European Union. He plans to be involved in policy-making on criminal sentencing, criminal procedure and law enforcement related issues upon completion of his Ph.D. The prestigious scholarship will cover the full cost of tuition and maintenance for three years of graduate study at Cambridge.

The Gates Cambridge Scholarship was established by the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation in October 2000. Cruz Reynoso

IN MARCH, the law school hosted a special screening of "Cruz Reynoso: Sowing the Seeds of Justice." The film is a portrait of the former California Supreme Court justice and former UCLA Law professor, Cruz Reynoso, the son of farm workers who has devoted his life to ending discrimination and promoting equal opportunity. Dean's Roundtables

Doug Brown

EACH YEAR, THE DEAN of UCLA School of Law invites distinguished guests to participate in an informal, roundtable luncheon with students. Guests discuss legal issues, careers and legal education, and answer students' questions. This year's guests included:

Doug Brown '84

Brown is a managing director of Regent Properties, which has acquired, developed and financed more than $1 billion in real estate transactions nationally since its establishment in 1989. He and his partner and classmate, Jeff Dinkin, told students how their current real estate ventures grew from an attempt to find cheap lodgings while in law school.

A. Barry Cappello

A. Barry Cappello '65

Cappello is the managing partner of Cappello & Noël, LLP, one of the country's foremost complex commercial litigation law firms. He told students how his professional career grew from an appreciation of his classmates' prowess and his seizing every opportunity that presented itself.

Janet Dhillon

Janet Dhillon '91

Dhillon is executive vice president, general counsel and secretary of J.C. Penney Company, Inc., one of America's leading retailers. Among the stories she shared was a riveting account of the afternoon when, as general counsel of US Airways Group, Inc., she witnessed and managed the landing of her then-firm's aircraft in the Hudson River.

Jeff Dinkin

Jeff Dinkin '84

Dinkin is a managing director of Regent Properties, which has acquired, developed and financed more than $1 billion in real estate transactions nationally since its establishment in 1989. He and his classmate and partner, Doug Brown, gave an illuminating account of how two classmates seeking cheap lodgings led to a current billion-dollar real estate enterprise.

Rick Gilchrist

Rick Gilchrist '71

Gilchrist is the president of the Irvine Company's Investment Properties Group, one of the country's most respected and diversified private real estate companies. He told students both of his personal journey to his current position and of the national and regional real estate trends that are reshaping our nation.

Carl Sanchez

Carl Sanchez '93

Sanchez is a partner in the corporate practice at Paul Hastings and is chair of the firm's Global Mergers & Acquisitions practice. Having flown his own plane to the roundtable, he described both his own path—from Air Force pilot to accountant to lawyer—and the shape of contemporary trans-national merger and acquisition practices.

4th Annual CRS Symposium Examines Intersectionality

THE CRITICAL RACE STUDIES PROGRAM (CRS) hosted and participated at the 4th annual CRS Symposium, “Intersectionality: Challenging Theory, Reframing Politics, Transforming Movements,” in March. The symposium also marked the 10th anniversary of the creation of CRS, which is the only U.S. law school program formally structured around concepts of Critical Race Theory.

Professor Kimberlé Crenshaw introduced the concept of intersectionality two decades ago. At its core the concept recognizes that some members of minority groups stand at “intersections,” coping, for example, both with the burdens of persons of color and of women. Since then, it has traversed multiple academic disciplines and numerous legal scholars have looked to the concept to understand how race, gender, sexuality, class, age and other forms of oppression intertwine. This three-day symposium convened leading scholars for an interdisciplinary examination of the origins of intersectionality as a theoretical framework and a site of legal interventions. The nearly 500 conference participants considered new applications and discussed the existing potential of intersectionality for provoking social change. The symposium also featured a spoken word performance of Eve Ensler’s “Any One of Us: Words from Prison.”

Professor Crenshaw delivered a keynote speech during the symposium, discussing in detail the importance of engaging in interdisciplinary studies. “All ideas are a product of engagement with other ideas, other histories, of people who have been influential in how you think, both in ways that you are aware of and many times in ways that you are unaware of,” she said. “We can talk about our intellectual roots in terms of ideas and we can pass on ideas, but what is really animating those ideas is not just the content, it’s the sensibility that they reflect, that they articulate, that they animate.”

Launched in 2007, the annual CRS symposium brings together academics, practitioners, students and community members to examine leading research on racial justice in an interdisciplinary and intellectually rigorous forum. The symposium is also the site of the annual reunion of friends and alumni of CRS.

UCLA Law Hosts 34th Annual Entertainment Symposium

David Ginsburg, executive director of the Entertainment and Media Law and Policy Program, with Lori McCreary, students Alexander Plitt '11 and Rachel Landy '12 and Morgan Freeman.

UCLA SCHOOL OF LAW hosted the 34th UCLA Entertainment Symposium, “Entertainment (R)evolution: Maximizing Opportunities,” in February. Interim Dean Stephen C. Yeazell offered a warm welcome to open the two-day symposium, noting that one of this year’s keynote speakers, Academy Award-winning actor Morgan Freeman, has portrayed both Nelson Mandela and God! The Q&A discussion with Freeman and Lori McCreary, CEO of Revelations Entertainment, was a highlight of the event. As longtime producers, business owners and entrepreneurs, Freeman and McCreary, who co-founded Revelations Entertainment in 1996, shared their experiences with, and perspectives on, the evolution of the entertainment industry. They described how studios are producing fewer films now, a circumstance making it harder for the independents, like their company. They also discussed how consumers will be able to access films in the future, saying that they will eventually be able to download, transport and then play movies whenever, and wherever, they want using a USB drive. The Q&A was moderated by Schuyler Moore '81, a partner at Stroock & Stroock & Lavan LLP and a UCLA Law adjunct professor.

The symposium, the annual flagship event for the entertainment industry, also featured candid discussions and lively exchanges by leading legal and entertainment industry executives who examined the current (r)evolution of the entertainment industry and how to best take advantage of the opportunities it presents.

UCLA Law Celebrates 2010 Alumni of the Year

John Branca, Stephen Yeazell and David Fleming

JOHN G. BRANCA '75 AND DAVID W. FLEMING '59 were honored as the UCLA School of Law 2010 Alumni of the Year recipients at a celebration in May.

"We are honored to pay tribute to John Branca and David Fleming, two accomplished alumni who have used their law degrees to benefit our community and profession," Interim Dean Stephen C. Yeazell said. "John is continually recognized by the legal community and his peers as one of the country's preeminent entertainment and corporate lawyers. David has served as a model of the lawyer as civic leader and public servant. We are very proud of their commitment to excellence. They embody the spirit of our law school."

Branca, a leading entertainment attorney and partner in the law firm of Ziffren Brittenham LLP, was honored for Professional Achievement. He has represented an unprecedented 29 members of the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, and, as co-executor of Michael Jackson's estate, has advanced Jackson's cultural and philanthropic legacy. Top Obama Administration Diplomat Discusses U.S. Commitment to Working with International Institutions

IN OCTOBER, UCLA SCHOOL OF LAW hosted a conversation with one of the Obama administration's top diplomats, Dr. Esther Brimmer, assistant secretary of state for international organization affairs. During a Q&A moderated by Professor Kal Raustiala, director of the UCLA Ronald W. Burkle Center for International Relations, and David Kaye, executive director of the International Human Rights Law Program, Dr. Brimmer described how the U.S. government's approach to international organizations has changed under the Obama administration, and discussed a variety of the administration's priorities.

Commencement 2010

More than 300 UCLA School of Law students joined the law school's alumni community when they were awarded their J.D., LL.M. and S.J.D. degrees during the UCLA Law commencement in May.

"Today, with the award of these degrees, you have gained the power, and I would say responsibility, to find the legal answers to the challenges of the 21st century, to help develop the law and to strengthen its ability to protect the lives and rights of all," said Commencement Speaker Stephen Rapp, ambassador-at-large for war crimes issues, U.S. Department of State.

Ambassador Rapp discussed his extensive international law background and conveyed the importance of international justice work. He encouraged the graduates to use their law degrees to help promote justice.

"The challenge of protecting civilians in zones of armed conflict is but one challenge of the world of the 21st century. There are the threats of environmental destruction, there is predatory and discriminatory conduct in the economy and society, there are dangers of new technologies being used to destroy or oppress. But the law can be the protector, so that individuals, families, communities and nations can live freely, and build and prosper. It will take your skill, your creativity, your commitment. Make it so," he said.

Public Interest Fellowships Enable Summer Work Throughout the Country and Abroad

WITH THE SUPPORT OF THE LAW SCHOOL'S Summer Public Service Fellowship Program and the Public Interest Law Fund (PILF), more than 240 1L and 2L students worked in a variety of public service positions throughout the country and abroad this summer. From the Office of the Prosecutor at the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda in Arusha, Tanzania and the U.S. Department of Homeland Security in Washington, D.C. to the World Health Organization in Geneva and the ACLU of Southern California, the work engaged in by grant recipients ran the gamut.

Grant recipient Marion (Mickey) Donovan-Kaloust '12, a member of the school's David J. Epstein Program in Public Interest Law and Policy (EPILP), spent the summer working in the Special Education and Early Intervention Program at the Alliance for Children's Rights in Los Angeles, which assures that children in the foster care and/or delinquency systems obtain essential special education services. She interviewed clients, performed case research and coordinated with the parents, foster caregivers, court appointed minors' attorneys and Department of Children and Family Services social workers to make sure that the children received all necessary services.

"There's a huge need for this type of work in the foster care system because there are all too many children being born exposed to drugs or who suffer from abuse or neglect, which impacts the development of their social/emotional and cognitive skills," she said. "It's been inspiring to see so many lawyers dedicated to providing a safety net for these kids."

Christian Kurpiewski '12, also in EPILP, spent the summer with the Christian Kurpiewski at work at the NHLP.

National Housing Law Project (NHLP), a law and advocacy center in Oakland that works to advance housing justice for the poor. Kurpiewski worked on a variety of housing law and policy projects, such as ensuring that government funding is being used to strengthen communities hard hit by the economic downturn and studying the local laws in California to make sure subsidized tenants are protected from unjust evictions.

"I believe policy work is crucial to ensure that the government fully supports the concept of a right to safe and decent affordable housing," he said. "Seeing the amazing collaborations and resource sharing that NHLP facilitates gives me hope that even if you aren't working directly on shaping policy, your work can shed light on what is happening on the ground and what is or is not working in our communities."

"The summer grant made it easier to choose to work in an unpaid public interest position this summer because it meant I could pay rent and still do the work I wanted to do! I'm very thankful for that," said Donovan-Kaloust, who secured her summer position through the annual Southern California Public Interest Career Day, which is hosted by the law school and coordinated by the Office of Public Interest Programs. Each grant provides a modest stipend, enabling students to work in public interest settings that typically have no funding for interns.

"The EPILP faculty and Office of Public Interest Programs staff were extremely accessible and very helpful in the job search process," added Kurpiewski, who also cited the EPILP-specific lawyering skills class for preparing him for his summer fellowship work. "I think the class' focus on the public interest aspects of these topics was extremely beneficial. I was able to more quickly transfer the lessons learned into the work I was doing."

The Summer Public Service Fellowship Program, which is supported by the annual Public Interest Law Fund (PILF) Auction, individual and law firm donations and the law school, is endowed and annual giving is administered by the Office of Public Interest Programs. The office also helps counsel students on public service opportunities and, together with the Office of Career Services, sponsors a slate of summer job search-oriented programming for students throughout the fall and into the spring semester.

For more information on the Summer Public Service Fellowship Program, please contact Catherine Mayorkas, director of EPILP and of Public Interest Programs, at (310) 206-9155 or via e-mail at mayorkas@law.ucla.edu. To make a donation to the program, please visit www.law.ucla.edu/giving.

Ann Carlson

Professor Carlson Co-authors Comprehensive National Report Urging Action on Climate Change

PROFESSOR ANN CARLSON, Shirley Shapiro professor of environmental law and faculty director of UCLA School of Law's Emmett Center on Climate Change and the Environment, is a co-author of a recently-released publication by the National Academy of Science, "Limiting the Magnitude of Climate Change." After the most comprehensive study of climate change to date, the report finds that the science behind climate change is clear and strong action is needed now to combat climate change. Professor Carlson was appointed to the National Academy of Science panel on Limiting the Magnitude of Future Climate Change in March 2009. During the past year, she and fellow panelists have worked to identify the most effective short-term actions and most promising long-term strategies to inform and guide the nation's response to climate change.

Frank G. Wells Environmental Law Clinic Secures Victory for Tribal Lands

IN JANUARY, STUDENTS in the Frank G. Wells Environmental Law Clinic secured a victory in a long-running battle over coal mining operations on land in Arizona belonging to Hopi and Navajo people. Under the direction of Sean Hecht, executive director of the Environmental Law Center, and Cara Horowitz, Andrew Sabin Family Foundation executive director of the Emmett Center on Climate Change and the Environment, the students drafted the motion that won the case. Filed in collaboration with Arizona attorney David Abney and his legal assistant Sean Gnant, the motion convinced an administrative law judge at the U.S. Department of Interior Office of Surface Mining to vacate the Environmental Impact Statement, which approved a new permit that consolidated two coal mines on Hopi land into one mining operation. The case involved decades of strip-mining of coal on Hopi and Navajo lands, which resulted in severe impacts on resources, including water supply and quality. The decision will affect both the policy and politics relating to future mining in the area.

Campaign for UCLA School of Law Reaches 77% of Goal

UCLA SCHOOL OF LAW'S $100 million campaign has reached $77 million in gifts and pledges. The campaign seeks to build an endowment, in order to compensate for state budget cuts and secure the law school's future. In the past, the law school was fully funded by the State of California. Today, the state provides less than 30% of the budget.

Like all other top tier law schools, UCLA Law must turn to its alumni and friends to provide the private support needed to sustain excellence and ensure continued access to the best and brightest students. If you have not yet made your campaign gift, please do so now by calling (310) 206-1121, or make a gift online at www.law.ucla.edu/giving. UCLA School of Law needs your support.

Students Monitor Historic Philippines Presidential Election

IN MAY, FOUR UCLA LAW STUDENTS, Lincoln Ellis '11, Kyle Todd '12, Christian Kurpiewski '12 and Farnoosh Hashemian '12, traveled to the Philippines to monitor and observe pre-election and election-day conditions during the country's recent historic presidential election – the first automated elections in the country. The students traveled to the Philippines as part of a National Lawyers Guild delegation, which was invited by the People's International Observer Mission. Stationed around the country, including in the nation's capital, Manila, the students monitored the polls, met with human rights groups and interviewed voters, candidates and community leaders to document any election irregularities. What they witnessed: widespread irregularities, malfunctions, fraud and intimidation. What they gained: a renewed sense of purpose in their studies and confidence in the skills they have learned at UCLA Law.

"It was horrifying to see the amount of misconduct and corruption that goes on during these 'free and fair' elections," said Christian Kurpiewski, who observed the elections in Estancia, a fishing village on the eastern tip of Iloilo province. "What I believe was the greatest barrier to a free election was the overwhelming presence of military soldiers and local police. I did not witness one polling place where a voter was able to cast a ballot without walking by an armed officer," he added.

According to Farnoosh Hashemian, who was stationed in Central Luzon, the home district of the leading presidential candidate, Benigno "Noynoy" Aquino, and President Arroyo, a lack of preparation and glitches in the newly automated system caused widespread delays and long lines. Some voters waited up to 10 hours to cast their votes. "This was a major challenge to voters' ability to determine their future," he said. "However, it is said that guns, gold and the political dynasties are the actual deciders of the outcome of the Philippines elections. We also observed that these traditional problems associated with the Philippines elections continue to be rampant," added Hashemian, who also had the opportunity to visit the "Moreng 43," a group of health workers who have been under arbitrary detention in the country for more than 150 days.

While the students' main goal was to monitor and report on election conditions, an important part of the trip was to also examine the country's systemic election problems and their causes. "Part of our goal was to document not just what happened on election day, but to also draw more attention to on-going problems," said Lincoln Ellis, who was also stationed in Estancia. "Too often, election observers focus on election day to the exclusion of the big picture."

According to Hashemian, the big picture will require changing the political culture that surrounds the elections, so that people's votes are protected and those elected are true representatives of the people. To this end, the work will continue at home, as the students look for ways to use the law as a tool for community organizing and empowerment. "This trip had an immense impact on my career vision," said Kyle Todd, who also spent time in Central Luzon. "My plan has always been to do worker-side labor law, and now I want to make a concerted effort to get involved in international human rights and workers' rights efforts."

"I plan to continue to focus my career on combating the cause of poverty and to fight for the voices that are drowned out by money and power," said Kurpiewski. "Only by letting the forces of corruption know that the international community is watching will the people of the Philippines have a strong democratic voice."

Student Kyle Todd photographs the group of election monitors in the Central Luzon province of Tarlac.

Seminars Offer Students New “Perspectives”

THE LAW SCHOOL LAST YEAR EMBARKED on a curricular experiment, designing new seminars to give second- and third-year students the chance to examine materials pertaining to law, lawyering and their emerging professional identities in a small and collegial environment. The “Perspectives on Law & Lawyering” seminars, limited to 10 students, are typically held off-campus—including at faculty members’ homes—in the evenings and/or on weekends. Students and faculty in the seminars meet over a meal to read and discuss interesting, non-traditional materials that go beyond what is typically found in a law school classroom. Materials include books, films or non-fiction works about lawyers, cases, trials or methods.

“There has always been a high level of cooperation, trust and interaction among the faculty and students at UCLA Law. Innovative teaching methods are encouraged, and our faculty members recognize the importance of—and genuinely enjoy—engaging with student both inside and outside the classroom,” said Professor Jennifer Mnookin, who taught the seminar “Literary Perspectives on Professional and Personal Identity” with Professor Ann Carlson. “Our new perspectives classes embody these ideals.”

Some of the recent creative offerings include:

“Only Human: Social Science Insights into Law and Lawyering,” which used recent developments in social science to address the question of how to be a good lawyer;

“Lawyers, Gender, and the Pursuit of Work/Life Balance,” which examined the challenges confronting young lawyers in achieving a successful balance between their professional and personal lives;

“Sex & Law: Perils and Pitfalls of Practice,” which considered ways to negotiate being a lawyer and a sexual human being at the same time;

“The Wire: Rethinking Lawyering within Dystopic Representations of Law and Order,” which used the television show The Wire as a window into a host of issues pertaining to the post-industrial legal order and its implications for future lawyers.

Critical Race Studies Series Addresses Issues Confronting Muslim/Arab Communities

THE CRITICAL RACE STUDIES PROGRAM (CRS) sponsored a year-long series of events, “Reinventing the Enemy Within,” addressing issues confronting Muslim/Arab communities inside and outside of the United States since September 11th. The series included panels that explored civil rights issues, sexuality and Islam, immigrants’ rights and the criminalization of Islamic philanthropy.

The first event, a panel discussion held in November, focused on whether anything has changed for Muslim/Arab communities under the Obama administration, and if so, what the changes have been. The second event, also held in November, was a screening of “A Jihad for Love,” a film exploring the interconnections between Islam and homosexuality. The final event, “Critical Perspectives on the Criminalization of Islamic Philanthropy in the War on Terror,” held in April, addressed the increased scrutiny of Muslim philanthropy following 9/11, resulting from concerns related to terrorism financing, and its impact on charitable institutions and practices.

Student Selected as Switzer Environmental Fellow

ISAAC SILVERMAN ’11 was selected by the Robert and Patricia Switzer Foundation as a Switzer Environmental Fellow. The Switzer fellowship is awarded to emerging environmental leaders who are dedicated to positive environmental change in their careers. Silverman, who is pursuing his J.D. with a focus in environmental litigation, is particularly interested in the ability of litigation to create space for policy change through robust enforcement and novel application of existing environmental law.

Student Trips Further Work of UCLA Law Programs

DURING THE PAST YEAR, UCLA School of Law students traveled to Cambodia, Denmark, the Netherlands and Malawi to further the work of the law school's Environmental and International Human Rights Programs.

David Kaye, executive director of the International Human Rights Law Program, led a group of International Justice Clinic students to The Hague in the Netherlands in November 2009 for an important meeting of the International Criminal Court (ICC)—it was the first time that the United States government sent an official delegation to observe progress at the war crimes court. Assigned to focus on a specific global region, the students interviewed delegates from governments and advocacy organizations to help prepare an independent, academic assessment of where the ICC's 110 member states stand today.

In December 2009, Cara Horowitz, the Andrew Sabin Family Foundation executive director of the Emmett Center on Climate Change and the Environment, led a group of six students to Copenhagen, Denmark for the U.N. Climate Change Conference. After a semester-long seminar where they learned about international climate agreements, the students spent a week at the two-week conference as credentialed delegates. They attended negotiating sessions and had the opportunity to meet with numerous delegates and hear their perspectives on the issues at hand. The students blogged about their trip on the UCLA Law/Berkeley Law environmental blog Legal Planet at legalplanet.wordpress.com.

The students who traveled to the U.N. Climate Change Conference also gave a presentation about their trip to the Los Angeles City Council. In January, they shared their takeaways from the conference and recommendations for Los Angeles during a city council meeting, and also met with Councilmember Paul Koretz.

In January, students in UCLA Law's International Justice Clinic, along with David Kaye, traveled to Phnom Penh, Cambodia as part of a project to connect Khmer Rouge victims now living in the United States with a special tribunal, the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia (ECCC). The clinic students have been working to help the victims tell their stories for the purposes of the ECCC, which was set up by the U.N. and Cambodia to try leaders of the Khmer Rouge. During their one-week visit to Phnom Penh, the students delivered nearly 200 victim statements to the Victims Unit of the ECCC, a first step toward building a relationship between the Cambodian diaspora and the court. The students also met with court officials, prosecutors, defense counsel and numerous human rights professionals. They posted reports about their work and blogged about their trip at uclahumanrights.blogspot.com.

In February, Professor Richard Steinberg led a group of 10 law students to The Hague for a conference organized with the president of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY). Students met with the ICTY president, with war crimes prosecutors and with each of the conference participants. The group also met with the prosecutor of the ICC, with whom the students have built a website forum that will foster a global public debate on important human rights problems.

In May 2009, International Justice Clinic students, who also participated in a health and human rights class taught by Professor Lara Stemple, traveled to Malawi on a fact-finding mission. After researching countries with national laws that are non-compliant with international legal norms concerning HIV/AIDS prevention, their goal was to identify opportunities to incorporate a health and HIV/AIDS policy element into the clinical work of the law school's International Human Rights Law Program. During their two-week trip, the students met with legal faculty members, students, global health specialists, nongovernmental organizations, government agencies and health and human rights advocates. They also conducted a workshop with law students from the University of Malawi - Chancellor College on international human rights law and its relationship to Malawian HIV/AIDS laws and policies.

Williams Institute Celebrates its 10th Anniversary

The Vision of Law School Philanthropist Chuck Williams

CHUCK WILLIAMS, WILLIAMS INSTITUTE FOUNDER

In 2001, Chuck Williams' vision and inaugural donation of $2.5 million created the Williams Institute on Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity Law and Policy at UCLA Law. Williams' gift was the largest donation ever given to any academic institution in support of a gay and lesbian academic program in any discipline. As the institute has grown, Mr. Williams has given more than $12 million to UCLA Law to support its work.

In just a decade, the Williams Institute has become one of UCLA Law's most treasured assets. It remains the only academic research center in the country focused exclusively on issues of sexual orientation and gender identity.

In 2001, the Williams Institute, then called the Williams Project, started with one part-time employee and a budget of $100,000. Today, it has 16 faculty and staff members, a budget of more than $1.8 million and an endowment of more than $17 million.

The institute has impacted policy throughout the country and internationally on important LGBT issues such as marriage, employment discrimination, parenting and adoption. In the past year alone, Williams Institute scholars have testified several times before Congress, trained judges and lawyers across the country, testified as expert witnesses in the federal challenge to Proposition 8, and successfully mentored its law teaching fellows to obtain tenure-track jobs as law professors. Its research and scholars are featured in the national media on an almost weekly basis.

Each year students at UCLA Law participate in the institute's National Sexual Orientation Law Moot Court Competition; contribute to the Dukeminier Awards Journal, a prize journal on LGBT-related law; attend its Annual Update conference and Works-in-Progress speaker series; and work directly with its faculty in a number of courses and research opportunities.

Last April, Mr. Williams was honored by the Central City Association with a "Treasure of Los Angeles" Award for his vision and generosity in creating the Williams Institute. This year he also received the UCLA Alumnus Award for Distinguished Service to the LGBT Community. Mr. Williams is currently a board member of the UCLA Foundation and chairs its Philanthropy Committee.

Williams Institute Research Director Publishes New Book on Same-sex Marriage; Key Witness at Prop 8 Trial

Last fall, Williams Institute Research Director M.V. Lee Badgett published When Gay People Get Married—What Happens When Societies Legalize Same-Sex Marriage (NYU Press, 2009). In the Netherlands, where same-sex marriage has been legal since 2001, Badgett interviewed same-sex couples to study the impact of same-sex marriage on them, as well as society at large. Badgett's book also examines the same-sex marriage debate in the context of American states, such as

Massachusetts and California. Based on her research, Badgett concludes that marriage changes gay people more than gay people change marriage.

In January, Badgett testified at the Perry v. Schwarzenegger trial in San Francisco. The U.S. District Court trial challenges the validity of Proposition 8, which enacted a constitutional ban on marriage for same-sex couples in California. Badgett's testimony drew on analyses from her new book and referenced a number of Williams Institute studies assessing the economic impacts associated with marriage equality and the demographic characteristics of same-sex couples and their children. In summarizing her work, Badgett testified, "I have looked at demographic data. I have looked at the reasons same-sex couples give for marrying. I have looked at how they are treated after they are married by their heterosexual communities and families. I have looked at behavior of heterosexual individuals before and after same-sex couples were allowed to marry, and I have seen no evidence of any harmful effect of allowing same-sex couples to marry."

LEE BADGETT, RESEARCH DIRECTOR

THE ECONOMICS OF MARRIAGE EQUALITY

"A study by the Williams Institute predicted that legalizing same-sex marriage [in Washington D.C.] will create 700 jobs and contribute $52.2 million over three years to the local economy."

—Washington Post, March 9, 2010

"California's gay-marriage ban is costing the state $490 million over three years...according to estimates...from M. V. Lee Badgett, research director at the Williams Institute."

—Wall Street Journal, January 28, 2010

"In 2008 about 116,000 same-sex couples across the country were raising a total of about 250,000 children under age 18, according to an analysis of Census data by Gary J. Gates, at the Williams Institute."

—The New York Times, January 20, 2010

"In Iowa, a 2008 UCLA study predicted that same-sex marriage could generate $160 million in new revenue there in just three years."

—National Public Radio, Dec 14, 2009

2010 RESEARCH BY THE WILLIAMS INSTITUTE SHOWS:

- An estimated 66,000 lesbians, gay men, and bisexuals are serving in the U.S. military, accounting for approximately 2.2% of military personnel.
- A persistent and significant wage gap exists between heterosexual and LGBT employees. For example, government LGBT employees earn wages that are 8-29% lower than their heterosexual counterparts.
- Same-sex couples face higher lifetime tax costs than their heterosexual counterparts. The estate tax disadvantage alone has cost same-sex couples more than $3.5 billion during the past decade.
- In the nation's largest study, the 17- year-old children of lesbian parents were found not significantly different from the children of different-sex couples in their mental or emotional development.
- If the FDA lifted its prohibition on gay men from donating blood, the nation's blood supply would have more than 219,000 more pints of blood each year, helping to address chronic shortages.

Leading Scholars Gather for Sexuality and Gender Law Symposium

In February, the Williams Institute held its Ninth Annual Update, Sexuality and Gender Law: Assessing the Field, Envisioning the Future, in conjunction with the UCLA Law Review Symposium. Organized by Williams Institute Legal Scholar Nan Hunter, the conference brought together the country's leading scholars to discuss one of the most dynamic and vibrant fields in American law. Matt Nosanchuk, senior counselor at the U.S. Department of Justice, and Chai Feldblum, commissioner of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, also spoke about the impact of legal scholarship on LGBT-related laws and public policies.

Opening Panel (L to R): Williams Institute Legal Scholarship Director & Georgetown Law Professor Nan Hunter; Yale Law School Professor Bill Eskridge; Yale Law School Professor Reva Siegel; NYU School of Law Professor Kenji Yoshino.

The conference also included the final round of the Sixth Annual Williams Institute Moot Court Competition. This year's moot court competition was the largest ever, with more than 30 law school teams from across the country registered to compete.

2010 Williams Institute Moot Court Competition Final Round Judges (L to R): California Court of Appeal Justice Steven Z. Perren, Connecticut Supreme Court Justice Joette Katz and Kansas Supreme Court Justice Carol A. Beier.

At the Williams Institute's Annual Gala Reception, more than 200 guests honored Richard Taylor for his endowment gift to create the Richard Taylor Law Teaching Fellowship.

Williams Institute Founder Chuck Williams thanks Arnold Kassoy and Gregory Marx for endowing the Richard Taylor Law Teaching Fellowship.

Williams Institute Partners with the U.S. Census Bureau for 2010 Census

The U.S. Census Bureau will count both married and unmarried same-sex couples during the 2010 Census. Senior researchers at the Williams Institute have led the way in identifying this issue and proposing solutions. In the past year, Williams Institute scholars have drafted research memos and met with Census and Commerce Department officials along with Congressional staff to provide legal and scientific rationales for changing census policy. Prior to the policy change, Williams Distinguished Scholar Gary Gates published an op-ed in the Los Angeles Times about the issue and was the first to call for a change in census procedures.

For the 2010 Census, the Williams Institute developed census outreach materials for the LGBT community, including a bilingual public service announcement video targeted toward LGBT communities of color; made presentations at community organizations about the policy change; and participated in a Congressional briefing on National Census Day. Census data has allowed the Williams Institute to estimate how many LGBT people are adopting and fostering children, how many veterans are currently serving in the armed forces and how many are paying higher income or estate taxes because their relationships are not legally recognized.

6TH WILLIAMS INSTITUTE LAW FELLOW PLACED IN U.S. LAW SCHOOL TENURE-TRACK POSITION TO TEACH SEXUALITY LAW

Kim Pearson, 2010 Williams Law Teaching Fellow, will begin her position as assistant professor at Gonzaga University School of Law in Fall 2010. In addition to Sexuality and the Law, Professor Pearson will teach courses in Family Law and Torts.

The Williams Institute Law Teaching Fellowship is a two-year program designed to support new scholars interested in teaching and researching sexual orientation and gender identity law issues. The Williams Institute is currently completing a campaign to endow its second law teaching fellow. As a result of a matching gift, the institute needs to raise $150,000 to meet its endowment goal.

For more information on the Law Teaching Fellowship or the endowment campaign, contact Williams Institute Development Director Matt Strieker at (310) 206-0725.

Williams Institute Research Plays Central Role in Congressional Hearings on Employment Non-Discrimination Act

Last September, Williams Institute Executive Director Brad Sears testified before the House Education and Labor Committee during its hearings on the Employment Non-Discrimination Act (ENDA). The testimony included key findings from a 1,500 page study completed by the Williams Institute documenting discrimination against LGBT people. The study showed a widespread and persistent pattern of unconstitutional discrimination by state governments on the basis of sexual orientation and gender identity.

The findings will support Congress in exercising its authority under Section 5 of the 14th amendment to provide a private right of action for damages under ENDA to state government employees who have suffered discrimination. If passed, ENDA would extend federal protections against job discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation and gender identity.

Federal Ruling Overturning California's Ban on Gay Marriage Relies Heavily on Williams Institute Research

In August, Judge Vaughn R. Walker, a federal judge in San Francisco, held that Proposition 8, a voter-enacted amendment to the California Constitution that prohibited same-sex couples from marrying, violated the U.S. Constitution's Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses. Williams Institute research, including the expert testimony of its Research Director Lee Badgett, is cited throughout the opinion, from its opening pages to its final paragraphs. In total, Williams Institute research is cited more than 30 times to support key factual findings.

UCLA LAW ALUMNI TRAILBLAZER:

Billy Mills '54

Judge Mills earned the admiration and respect of his colleagues, friends and the Los Angeles community during a long and distinguished career

To veteran watchers of the Los Angeles political scene, few names evoke as much admiration, respect and genuine affection as that of Judge Billy G. Mills '54. Widely credited with helping to usher the city into a period of renewed unity and cooperation after the tumultuous Watts Riots in 1965, Judge Mills is a revered civic leader whose life and career have been marked by a history of trailblazing achievement, including distinction as the first African-American graduate of UCLA School of Law.

After finishing high school in Waco, Texas in the late 1940s, Judge Mills put down roots in Southern California, enrolling at Compton College, where he also played football. He excelled both on and off the field, and in short order transferred to UCLA, graduating with honors in 1951. His next step: beginning a course of study at UCLA's new law school, which even then was emerging as a proving ground for the state's brightest legal, business and political minds. It was while at UCLA Law that he met and married his wife Rubye, also a UCLA graduate.

Though his race set him apart from his law school classmates, Judge Mills, says his son Bill Mills, also a UCLA Law graduate ('82), "drew no significance from the challenges of being black. He just knew he had to be better than everybody else, and that was his overarching goal"—a goal, the younger Mills says, that his dad tackled with characteristic discipline, ambition and drive. "He's a prodigious note taker, and he studied all the time, spending long nights in the library and working to be as successful as he possibly could be."

That success quickly translated to the professional world, in part because, says Bill Mills, "the fact that he was both a UCLA undergraduate and UCLA Law graduate made him extremely unique in Los Angeles generally, and certainly in South Central, where he was practicing law." Judge Mills soon caught the attention of prominent Democratic politicians Jesse Unruh and Mervyn Dymally, who encouraged him to run for a seat on the Los Angeles City Council. His victory signaled another impressive accomplishment, making him the first black councilman to win a regularly scheduled election. A rising political star and a model of bipartisan collaboration, Judge Mills was selected to co-chair the Democratic National Convention in 1968 before being appointed by Republican Governor Ronald Reagan to the Los Angeles County Superior Court.

Throughout the course of a remarkable career, Judge Mills has never forgotten his academic roots. "He loves UCLA Law more than anything," says Bill Mills, citing Professor Chadbourne and Dean Coffman as his father's favorite law school professors. "He's very proud of the time he spent there and stays close with members of his class." One fellow student, Martin Horn '54, remains a good friend. Judge Mills, says Horn, is not only an exceptional and groundbreaking figure in recent Los Angeles history; he is also "a very warm person" who is "liked by all who meet him." This easy camaraderie served him well as president of the UCLA Law School Alumni Association, a position that enabled him to give back to the institution that helped set him on his extraordinary path.

It was perhaps inevitable that Judge Mills would pass this passion for UCLA Law on to the next generation. As Bill Mills sees it, it was a genetic inheritance. "It was engrained," he says. "I knew from the very beginning I wanted to follow him—and I never wavered from that, intellectually or emotionally. For every minute I was thinking about my future, I knew my future was at UCLA School of Law."

Tom Kirschbaum '77

THE UCLA LAW COMMUNITY IS DEEPLY SADDENED by the loss of esteemed alumnus Tom Kirschbaum '77, who passed away in a tragic accident at sea in May at the age of 57.

Tom, a partner at Irell & Manella, was widely recognized as one of California's leading tax, compensation and employee benefits attorneys. He was known for his love of his family, his love of sailing and his great sense of humor. Tom was also a gentleman and a generous and dedicated philanthropist.

Tom was a world-class sailor with a passion for sailing dating back to childhood. In 2008, he fulfilled a childhood dream by successfully competing in the Singlehanded Transpac Race, a 2,120-mile solo race across the Pacific, from San Francisco to Hawaii. Passionate about solo sailing, he spent years preparing for the race and running qualifying races. He was also a member of the Pacific Singlehanded Sailing Association.

At UCLA Law, Tom was a member of the UCLA Law Review and a member of the UCLA Moot Court Honors Program.

"Tom practiced tax and benefits law at the highest level, just as he did everything else in his life—with style, intellect, passion, compassion, wit and humor. He truly was the gold standard and touched many lives profoundly. Tom will not be forgotten," said Jim Barrall '75 of Latham & Watkins, who was Tom's close friend, former partner at Ervin, Cohen & Jessup and colleague in the tax and benefits bar.

More than two hundred friends and colleagues, as well as Tom's family, gathered in June to honor him at a memorial service held at the California Yacht Club. In a testament to Tom, the service included a performance generously provided by the LA Opera and by concert pianist, Mona Golabek.

"Tom practiced tax and benefits law at the highest level, just as he did everything else in his life—with style, intellect, passion, compassion, wit and humor."

— Jim Barrall

"Tom was a first-rate human being, lawyer, scholar and a gentleman. He will be sorely missed," Elliot Brown, managing partner of Irell & Manella, said.

Tom is survived by his wife, Gayle, two daughters, Ilana, 25, and Dina, 18, as well as his mother, Meta Kirschbaum, and two sisters, Jane Lai and Betsey Houston.

Jim Barrall and Tom's many friends and colleagues in the tax, benefits and legal community intend to establish a scholarship in his name to annually recognize a UCLA Law student who embodies Tom's spirit and very special qualities. For more information about the scholarship, or to make a donation, please contact Donna Colin, director of major gifts and stewardship, at (310) 825-3025 or colin@law.ucla.edu.
